

Fall Campaign

I hesitated sending out letter requesting help. I know that it is almost time for our Christmas campaign. However, when I looked at the list of children hoping for medical treatment, I had no choice. The results have been wonderful.

Businesses, people that participated in mission trips and many old donors responded. We immediately began sending more children for medical treatment and increased the number of families we help with food and water. We delivered a truck-load of groceries to shelters in Nuevo-Laredo and also helped in the colonias of Piedras-Negras. In Nuevo-Laredo, a company of soldiers asked what I was doing and they followed me to further insure my safety.

Every day I read about the U.S. economy, protests, Wall Street and Greece. I can't do much to fix those problems. (I am not even smart enough to understand some of those problems). However, I do understand the problems of Louis. He has cancer and his family does not have the money to send him to Monterrey for treatment. I understand how to buy bus tickets and pay doctor bills. Louis and his family do not understand how strangers like you care about their 4-year old. Alma, the mother of Louis, shed tears as she tried to express her thanks.

Yes, the Fall Campaign is a success.
